Introduction

One of the most constructive objectives of the national commemoration of the centennial of the American Civil War is the publication of guides, pamphlets, and finding aids to the rich and varied sources of information in the Department of Archives and History. The Mississippi Department of Archives and History published in 1962 a guide to the sources of information in the Department of Archives and History.

Introduction

One of the most constructive objectives of the national commemoration of the centennial of the American Civil War is the publication of guides, indexes and finding aids to the still extant writings produced in the turbulent period 1861-1865, and the republication of scarce Civil War imprints now in danger of complete oblivion. The Mississippi Department of Archives and History published in 1961 a two-volume set, Mississippi in the Confederacy, ably edited by Dr. John K. Bettersworth, Mississippi State University, and Dr. James W. Silver, University of Mississippi.

This guide to Confederate and Union manuscripts, newspapers, broadsides, sheet music, and official papers or archives, part of which was printed in two installments in the Journal of Mississippi History (July, 1961 and October, 1961), is a continuation of the Department's effort to make available the invaluable source material which for many years has been almost lost in its files. It is felt that an index is not necessary, because most of the items included in the guide are listed alphabetically or numerically. Scholars, researchers and writers who are constantly seeking fresh sources of information on the Civil War years will find this guide a long needed and useful research tool. Laymen who are especially interested in this period of our history will now be able to read the sentiments of Mississippians and others who lived through the war years, as they were written in the heat of conflict.

The Department of Archives and History is proud to present this guide, compiled by two of its staff members, as part of its observance of the Civil War Centennial.

IMPRINTS AND NEWSPAPERS

One of the most interesting periods in the history of American printing occurred during the four-year life of the Confederate States of America. The collecting of Confederate imprints has long been a hobby of amateurs and a serious undertaking for libraries throughout the United States. The compilation below represents the Confederate imprints and the Civil War newspapers on file in the Mississippi Department of Archives and History.

The standard reference on Confederate imprints, Marjorie Lyle Crandall's Confederate Imprints: A Check List Based Principally on the Collection of the Boston Athenaeum (1955) and the supplement, More Confederate Imprints (1957) by Richard B. Harwell, have been used for identification of the imprints.

The first part of this checklist consists of imprints not listed by Crandall or Harwell. The second part is a list of the holdings in this Department included in Crandall and Harwell. A short title and date of publication are given with the Crandall or Harwell number. The third part of the checklist lists all Civil War newspapers, both Union and Confederate, on file in the Department. The list is arranged by place of publication.
